Birding to Change the World

A Memoir

Trish O'Kane

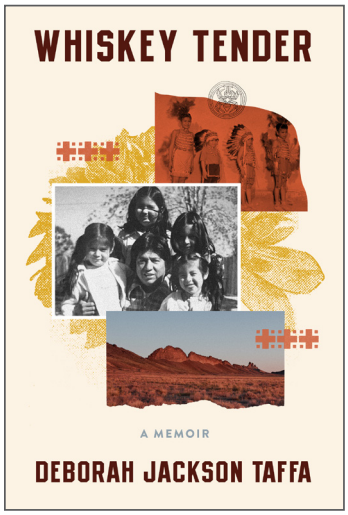

Trish O'Kane is a self-professed accidental birder and accidental teacher. When Hurricane Katrina destroyed her New Orleans home and community, Trish's questions for meaning shifted from How can I make the world a better place? What can I do? to How should I be?.

Through the creation of an afterschool mentoring program that pairs college undergraduates with local elementary school children, Birding to Change the World tells Trish's story of learning to be a citizen of a place, not just of the world, through ornithology and conservation, community organizing, and social justice work. Trish's story will help make visible to students the responsibility they have of being engaged, informed citizens of their college towns and cities to make a positive difference to their communities' needs.

Whiskey Tender

A Memoir

Deborah Jackson Taffa

★ PEN America/Jean Stein Grant for Literary Oral History

A mixed-tribe native girl—born on the California Yuma reservation and raised in Navajo territory in New Mexico—comes to her own interpretation of identity, despite her parent's desires for her to transcend the class and "Indian" status of her birth through education, and despite the Quechan tribe's particular traditions and beliefs regarding oral and recorded histories.

> "This book, never anything less than mesmerizing, is full of family stories and vital Native history. It pulses and it aches, and it lifts, consistently. It threads together so much truth by the time we are done, what has been woven together equals a kind of completeness from brokenness, and a hope from knowing love and loss and love again by naming it so."

Being Wrong

Adventures in the Margin of Error

Kathryn Schulz

To err is human. Yet most of us go through life assuming (and sometimes insisting) that we are right about nearly everything, from the origins of the universe to how to load the dishwasher. If being wrong is so natural, why is our grasp of the psychology of belief so flawed that we are bad at imagining our ideas could be mistaken, and why do we react to our errors with surprise, denial, defensiveness, and shame?

In the tradition of The Wisdom of Crowds and Predictably Irrational, Being Wrong explores the fascinating human cognition behind what it means to be in error, and why homo sapiens tend to tacitly assume (or loudly insist) that they are right about most everything. Kathryn Schulz argues that error is the fundamental human condition and should be celebrated as such. Guiding the reader through the history and psychology of error, from Socrates to Alan Greenspan, Being Wrong will change the way you perceive screw-ups, both of the mammoth and daily variety, forever.

Reader, Come Home

The Reading Brain in a Digital World

Maryanne Wolf

Maryanne Wolf's Proust and the Squid revealed what we know about how the brain learns to read and how reading changes the way we think and feel. Drawing deeply on research on the reading brain, Reader, Come Home comprises a series of letters Wolf writes to us—her beloved readers—to describe her concerns and her hopes about what is happening to the reading brain as it unavoidably changes to adapt to digital mediums.

Wolf draws on neuroscience, literature, education, and philosophy and blends historical, literary, and scientific facts with down-to-earth examples and warm anecdotes to illuminate complex ideas that culminate in a proposal for a biliterate reading brain. Provocative and intriguing, Reader, Come Home is a roadmap that provides a cautionary but hopeful perspective on the impact of technology on our brains and our most essential intellectual capacities—and what this could mean for our future.

The AI Con

How to Fight Big Tech's Hype and Create the Future We Want

Emily M. Bender and Alex Hanna

Is artificial intelligence going to take over the world? Have big tech scientists created an artificial lifeform that can think on its own? Are we about to enter an age where computers are better than humans at everything?

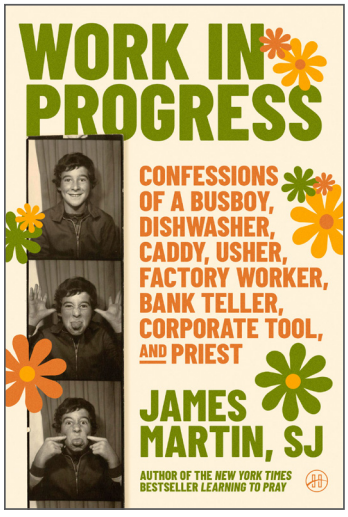

The answer to these questions, linguist Emily M. Bender and sociologist Alex Hanna make clear, are "no," "they wish," and "definitely not." In The AI Con, Bender and Hanna offer a sharp and wide-ranging take-down of AI hype across its many forms.

Bender and Hanna show your students how to spot AI hype, how to deconstruct it, and how to expose the power grabs it aims to hide. Armed with these tools, your students will be prepared to push back against AI hype at work, as a consumer in the marketplace, as a skeptical newsreader, and as a citizen holding policymakers to account. Together, Bender and Hanna expose AI hype for what it is: a mask for Big Tech's drive for profit, with little concern for who it affects.

Work In Progress

Confessions of a busboy, dishwasher, caddy, usher, factory worker, bank teller, corporate tool, and priest

James Martin, SJ

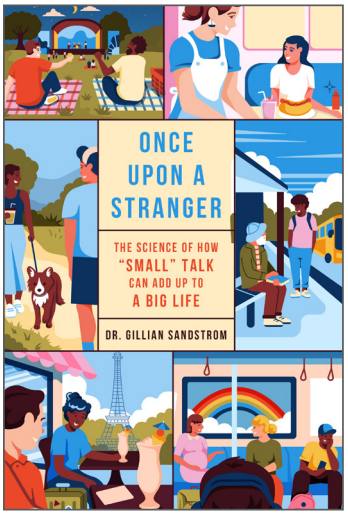

Work in Progress is a snapshot of several years—first as a boy, then as a teenager, and finally as a young adult—of being thrown into a series of jobs for which Martin had zero training. He had never set foot in a restaurant kitchen before working as a busboy and dishwasher; never stepped onto a golf course before working as a caddy; and had never seen a factory floor before working as an assembly-line worker. He almost always felt uncomfortable, unsettled, and uneasy. But, like many of us, he needed the money.

Each chapter features photos of memories and milestones throughout Father Martin's young life. If you're an aficionado of snafus, you won't be disappointed. He's not the hero of these stories, more a hapless teenager who learns in each job, even the ones he loathes, something about the value of work, about what it means to be an adult, about people, and about life overall.

Once Upon a Stranger

The Science of How "Small" Talk Can Add Up to a Big Life

Dr. Gillian Sandstrom

Do you ever feel lonely, even in a crowd? Do you feel anxious or worried about what others think of you, or struggle to make friends? You are not alone. But the truth is, opportunities for positive connection and community are all around you.

Dr. Gillian Sandstrom, professor of psychology at the University of Sussex, reveals that talking to strangers is the key to unlocking more joy, curiosity, and goodwill every day of our lives. In an age when loneliness is a social health crisis and harmful phenomena like groupthink increase our perception of distance and polarization, Once Upon a Stranger provides transformational insight into the benefits of stretching our perceived limits and connecting with our fellow humans.

The Opposite of Happiness

How Bad Feelings Make and Break Us

George Loewenstein

In The Opposite of Happiness, George Loewenstein draws on decades of influential research—as well as insights from literature and from his own life experiences—to offer a reexamination of the role negative emotions play in our lives: why pain is stickier than pleasure, how the modern world makes bad feelings worse, and why our attempts to escape misery usually only sharpen its sting. Those who struggle to find and sustain happiness are not unlucky or flawed, he argues, but merely human.

The Opposite of Happiness shares a sobering, deeply human, and ultimately comforting truth: The sooner we understand our negative natures, the sooner we will stop feeling guilty about failing to achieve lasting bliss, and the better connected we will be to others who share the same, or their own unique mix of, negative emotions.

You've Changed

The Promise and Price of Self-Transformation

Benoit Denizet-Lewis

We live in an age obsessed with reinvention. On Instagram, in recovery meetings, through name-change petitions, lifestyle pivots, deconversion blogs, and political conversion manifestos, we're surrounded by stories of radical personal change. But what does it really mean to shed an old skin—and why do some transformations inspire us while others raise our hackles?

You've Changed is a book for anyone who's ever tried to become someone new, fix what felt broken, drag someone else into changing, or wondered whether real transformation is anything more than a myth we sell ourselves. Denizet-Lewis shows us that profound, positive change is possible—and offers an unexpected, sometimes counterintuitive set of approaches to help us get there.

The Case for Quitting

The Surprising Benefits of Opting Out

Lindsay Crouse

We live in a society that champions perseverance, sweat, and tenacity no matter the cost. But what if our relentlessness results in failure, sunken costs, and poor health, rather than success, happiness, and vitality? Lindsay Crouse, an award-winning reporter and lively writer for the New York Times, argues that our society has tricked us into thinking that endurance is an ultimate achievement, despite the surprising cost to ourselves.

She delves into the science of perseverance versus walking away from aspects of our lives, and relays a diverse blend of compelling personal stories, historical examples, and psychological insights. The Case for Quitting is a groundbreaking guide that ruptures our core beliefs. Career seekers, athletes, entrepreneurs, and anyone exploring new opportunities or feeling stuck in unproductive routines will appreciate its insights on the courage and—importantly—strategy involved in quitting.

All My Dead Cats and Other Losses

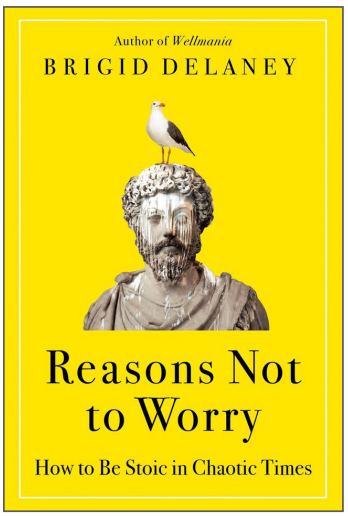

Practicing Good Grief in a Culture That Fears Mourning

s.e. smith

Have you suffered a loss? How was your life changed by the grief you experienced? Did you feel like your grief was properly acknowledged? Mourning is a personal experience and shouldn't be judged. There are no do-overs in death, but there are do-betters.

This is a book about grief and mourning as collective activities best undertaken in community.

s.e. interviews dozens of experts—from death doulas to funeral home directors to therapists and psychologists—and discusses the different stages of grief. The shared perspectives help us understand that grief is not fixable but it can be livable. They teach us that if we have the courage, which begins with honest conversations about how we navigate grief, then we can learn how to do better.

Reasons Not to Worry

How to Be Stoic in Chaotic Times

Brigid Delaney

Like many people today, Brigid Delaney was searching for answers to timeless questions: How can we be good? Find inner peace? Properly grieve? Tame our insecurities, such as the fear of missing out? Determine what truly matters?

Centuries ago, the Stoics pondered many of these same questions. Over the course of a year, she dedicated herself to following the wisdom of Seneca, Epictetus, and Marcus Aurelius. She hoped to discover how she could use the wisdom of these ancient thinkers to navigate life in the modern world. In Reasons Not to Worry, Brigid shares what she learned, showing us how we, too, can draw on the Stoics to regain a sense of agency and tranquility and find meaning in our lives.

Together

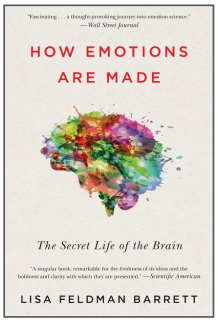

The Healing Power of Human Connection in a Sometimes Lonely World

Vivek H. Murthy

In his groundbreaking book, the 19th Surgeon General of the United States Dr. Vivek Murthy makes a case for loneliness as a public health concern: a root cause and contributor to many of the epidemics sweeping the world today from alcohol and drug addiction to violence to depression and anxiety.

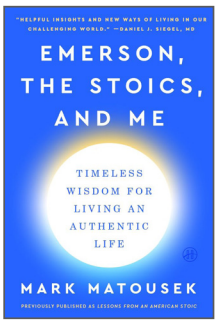

> "We have a massive, deadly epidemic hidden in plain sight: loneliness. It is as harmful to health as smoking and far more common. And as his gripping stories of the science and suffering make clear, we can do something about it. Together is fascinating, moving, and essential reading."

On Natural Capital

The Value of the World Around Us

Partha Dasgupta

Cambridge University economist Sir Partha Dasgupta lays out a seminal new approach to economics that asks: What if we were to put a value on nature just as we value everything else?

For just about everything of value in life, there is an economic model. If it matters to us, we have found a way to put a dollar amount on it, to quantify its importance in our lives and society. And yet for as long as they have existed, our economic models have served us an incomplete picture; they fail to account for the fact that our growth is driven by a resource that we take for free and treat as infinite: nature. Dasgupta's approach examines the existential need to rethink our relationship to nature and see its preservation, not as a commodity or simply as "irreplaceable," but as an economic imperative.

Start with a Bear

Humans, Grizzlies, and the Power of Stories on a Crowded Planet

Peter S. Alagona

In Start with a Bear, historian, ecologist, and bear expert Peter Alagona suggests we must reimagine the very heart of conservation, inviting a new framework for sustainable, reciprocal relations with the wild creatures that remain. Spanning centuries of history and traversing landscapes from California and Spain to the Gobi Desert and Alaska, this work is an epic journey toward a new ecological consciousness. Through the lens of our largest and perhaps most complex furry neighbors, Alagona illuminates what is at stake in our shared extinction crisis. He asks us to not merely manage these creatures, but to confront the profound question of what it means to genuinely share our planet with the myriad lives that still inhabit it alongside us, to reconsider our place on a warming, crowded earth.

The Nature of Our Cities

Harnessing the Power of the Natural World to Survive a Changing Planet

Nadina Galle

We live in an age when humanity spends 90% of its time indoors, yet the nature around us—especially in America's cities—has never been more vital. As ecological engineer Dr. Nadina Galle shows in The Nature of Our Cities, nature is our most critical infrastructure for tackling the climate crisis. It just needs a little help.

Galle embarks on a journey as fascinating as it is pressing, showing how scientists and citizens from around the world are harnessing emerging technologies to unlock the power of the natural world to save their cities, a phenomenon she calls the "Internet of Nature." Traveling the globe, she examines how urban nature, long an afterthought for many, points the way toward a more sustainable future.

As If We Were Staying

How We Build a Flourishing Future in a World That's Falling Apart

Spencer R. Scott

In an age of social fragmentation and ecological emergency, many of us feel a profound disconnect—from the land, from our communities, and even from our own values. How do we find the hope and determination to live on this planet as if we were staying?

Inspired by the solarpunk movement's insistence that life must come before profit, biologist and environmentalist Spencer R. Scott weaves memoir and scientific inquiry to chronicle his journey from biotech research to the co-founding of Solar Punk Farms, a queer regenerative farm and educational center rooted in place. Drawing on his background in biology, Scott reframes capitalism as an environment many of us have unconsciously adapted to in order to survive—and documents what it means to step out of that protected interior and re-enter ecological reality.

Provisions

Finding Home Through the Food Folklore of the Appalachian Table

Amanda Held Opelt

Amanda Held Opelt's childhood was shaped by the shared, multi-generational table that brought everyone to her Granny's 100-acre farm. But as she came of age at the peak of the nineties' diet culture, her relationship with her body became fraught, and she began to resent the culinary culture of her Appalachian heritage. When her own daughter was born, she realized another body depended upon her nourishment. That was when she set out to learn how to cook and reclaim her ancestor's food traditions.

In Provisions, Opelt devotes herself to attending local sorghum boil parties and apple festivals, interviewing farmers, foragers, and herders, and recreating the meals she remembers her Granny serving at her own table. She confronts the false food narratives that dominated the religious landscape of her Southern, conservative roots. Along the way, Opelt rediscovers the joy of eating, and with newfound faith learns to love her body again and the places it calls home.

Aimee Nezhukumatathil

In Bite by Bite, poet, essayist, and author of World of Wonders Aimee Nezhukumatathil explores the way food and drink evoke our associations and remembrances—a subtext or layering, a flavor tinged with joy, shame, exuberance, grief, desire, or nostalgia.

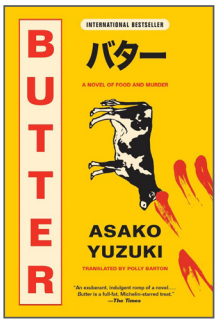

Nezhukumatathil restores our astonishment and wonder about food through her encounters with a range of foods and food traditions. From shave ice to lumpia, mangoes to pecans, rambutan to vanilla, she investigates how food marks our experiences and identities and explores the boundaries between heritage and memory.

The Cruelty of Nice Folks

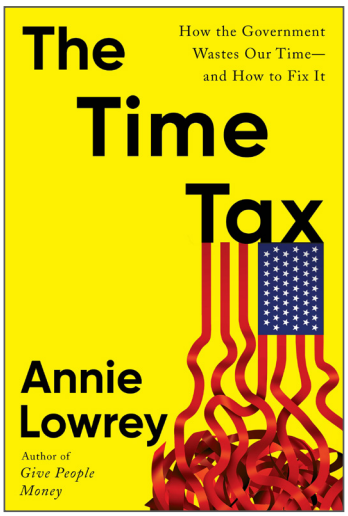

Why Minneapolis Is the Story of America

Justin Ellis

It's the "North," they like to say, not the Midwest. It's different. Minneapolis is a city for everyone. But in 2020, George Floyd's murder by the city's police left many Americans stunned and wondering, "How could this happen in Minneapolis?" To Ellis, the real question is: What made people think it couldn't?

The Minneapolis Justin Ellis grew up in is not the idealistic metropolis it claims to be. The "City of Lakes" was built on discrimination much like all other American cities. Black families were systematically cut out of the prosperous neighborhoods, lush parks, and pristine lakes that make Minneapolis a haven of the heartland. But when George Floyd's murder sparks a global protest movement with the city as ground zero, its residents must finally ask what being a good neighbor actually means.

The Time Tax

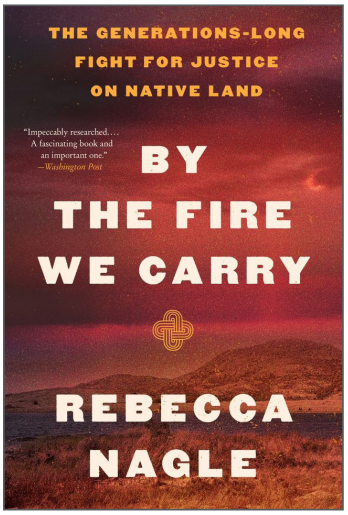

How the Government Wastes Our Time— and How to Fix It

Annie Lowrey

Nobody likes doing paperwork, and Americans do a lot of it. If time is money, the hoops we jump through to comply with the rules are one more bill we as citizens are forced to pay, and an extortionate one.

Journalist Annie Lowrey has termed this the "time tax": the paperwork, aggravation, and mental effort imposed on citizens when they access the rights and benefits that are supposed to be theirs. How did the world's wealthiest country end up with such a convoluted, punitive, and inept system of public administration? Lowrey traces a pathbreaking history of administrative burdens in the United States, revealing how they were historically a tool of discrimination. The Time Tax will enrage you, enlighten you, and, most important, provide a point-by-point guide for reclaiming your precious time."

By the Fire We Carry

The Generations-Long Fight for Justice on Native Land

Rebecca Nagle

Before 2020, American Indian reservations made up roughly 55 million acres of land in the United States. Nearly 200 million acres are reserved for national forests—in the emergence of this great nation, our government set aside more land for trees than for Indigenous peoples. That changed on July 9, 2020, when a high-profile Supreme Court case—which originated with a small-town murder two decades earlier—affirmed the reservation of Muscogee Nation. The ruling resulted in the largest restoration of tribal land in U.S. history, merely because the Court chose to follow the law.

In By the Fire We Carry, Rebecca Nagle tells the story of the generations-long fight for tribal land and sovereignty in Eastern Oklahoma. By chronicling both the contemporary legal battle and historic acts of Indigenous resistance, By the Fire We Carry exposes both the wrongs that our nation has committed in its long history of greed, corruption, and lawlessness, and the Native battle for the right to be here that has shaped our country.

The Overseer Class

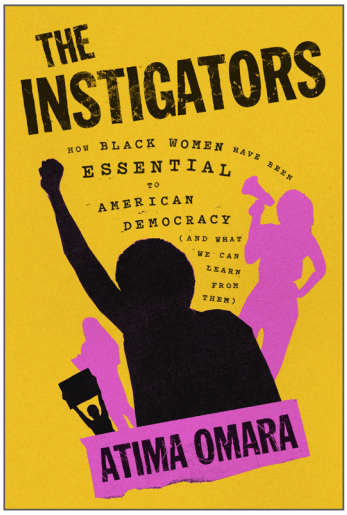

A Manifesto

Steven W. Thrasher

The Overseer Class explores what happens when members of historically minoritized groups are selected for high-visibility positions of power within existing institutions—but under the conditions of a kind of Faustian bargain.

This book is about the kinds of compromises made by a small but influential group of people from minoritized groups in the United States as they have entered segregated institutions in highly visible positions.

The Overseer Class explores what it looks like in mass media, universities, corporate America, the military, and government. The Overseer Class aims not only to educate us and start this discussion but to provide a framework for challenging that dynamic.

The Instigators

How Black Women Have Been Essential to American Democracy

Atima Omara

"How can we build a truly inclusive multi-racial democracy?" For Atima Omara, the answer is The Instigators—a name she has given to a demographic of Black women between the ages of 18 and 45. These women are uniquely equipped to save American democracy. They didn't ask for this ability, she argues, it was forced on them because racism and sexism have made them the most marginalized group in American politics. We can all benefit from their strategic know-how as we rebuild our society.

The Instigators is at once an urgent political guide, a historical exploration, and a poignant memoir that pulls from Omara's two decades of work in Democratic politics and the progressive movement. Powerful, insightful, and practical, it is imperative reading for everyone eager to protect and rebuild our democracy and create a better tomorrow for all.

Essential

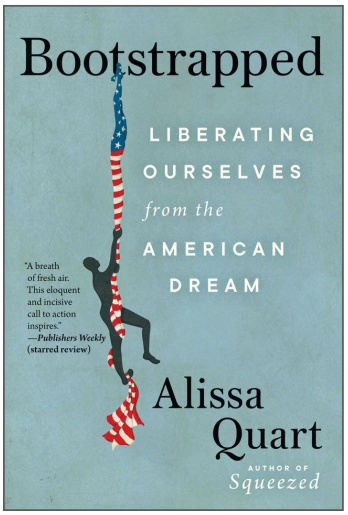

Being Latino and Indispensable in America

Enrique Acevedo

In a country still grappling with its sense of identity and the question of who belongs, Essential explores: What does it mean to be Latino in America today?

Latinos comprise nearly one in five Americans, including more than eleven million in California alone. Yet their place in the national conversation is too often reduced, politicized, or misunderstood, especially when filtered through the narrow lens of immigration.

From frontline workers during the pandemic to families navigating the opaque machinery of deportation, Essential explores labor, identity, resilience, and the quiet contradictions Latinos carry every day. It challenges the false choice between assimilation and exclusion. It calls on the country to expand its definition of belonging to reflect its people's full complexity and history.

Bootstrapped

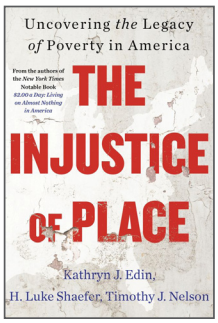

Liberating Ourselves from the American Dream

Alissa Quart

The promise that you can "pull yourself up by your bootstraps" is central to the story of the American Dream. It's the belief that if you work hard and rely on your own resources, you will eventually succeed. However, time and again we have seen how this foundational myth, with its emphasis on individual determination, brittle self-sufficiency, and personal accomplishment, does not help us. Instead, as income inequality rises around us, we are left with shame and self-blame for our condition.

Acclaimed journalist Alissa Quart argues that at the heart of our suffering is a do-it-yourself ethos, the misplaced belief in our own independence and the conviction that we must rely on ourselves alone. Looking at a range of delusions and half solutions—from "grit" to the false Horatio Alger story to the rise of GoFundMe—Quart reveals how we have been steered away from robust social programs that would address the root causes of our problems.

Articulate

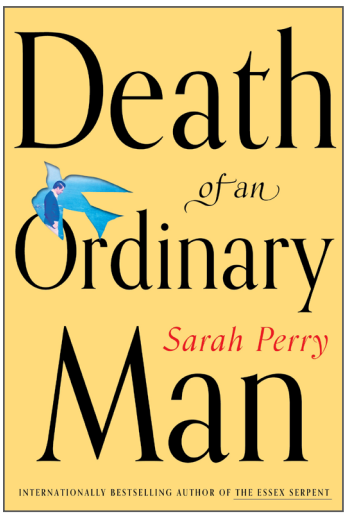

A Deaf Memoir of Voice

Rachel Renee Kolb

Born in the same year that the Americans with Disabilities Act was passed, author Rachel Rennee Kolb grew up as part of the first generation of deaf people with legal rights to accessibility services. Still, from a young age, she contorted herself to expectations set by a world that prioritizes hearing people. So, she learned to speak through speech therapy and to piece together missing sounds through lipreading and an eventual cochlear implant, all while finding clarity and meaning in American Sign Language (ASL) and written literature.

Part memoir, part cultural exploration, Articulate details a life lived among words in varied sensory forms and considers why and how those words matter. Articulate is a linguistic coming-of-age in both deaf and hearing worlds, challenging us to consider how language expresses our humanity—and offering more ways we might exist together.

Death of an Ordinary Man

Sarah Perry

Death of an Ordinary Man opens on a charming, merry seaside scene in late August. Perry, her husband, and her father-in-law David are at the Yarmouth carnival they've gone to every summer for decades. The next time Sarah sees David three weeks later, watching him approach across the market, she knows instantly and with a certainty she's never had before: David is dying. He'll be dead in less than three months' time from a rare and swiftly moving cancer.

What follows is Perry's intimate account of sitting at David's bedside across the final days of his life. Perhaps most importantly, she mourns all that will be lost forever with his passing, even as she celebrates that he was here in the first place.

Sitting Pretty

The View from My Ordinary Resilient Disabled Body

Rebekah Taussig

When Rebekah Taussig—who has a Ph.D. in disability studies and is disabled herself—created the Instagram account @sitting_pretty, she was driven by the fact that disabled people are not adequately represented. She felt disabled people didn't see stories about themselves that they could relate to, and that non-disabled people have a narrow, one-dimensional view of disability. In her work, Dr. Taussig strives to paint a more nuanced portrait of disability. It can be tough and uncomfortable, but it can also be just fine, it can be ordinary, it can even be fulfilling.

In this memoir-in-essays, Dr. Taussig illustrates the need for more stories and more voices to understand the diversity of humanity. Sitting Pretty challenges your students to be patient and vigilant, practical, and imaginative, kind and relentless, as we as a society set out to write an entirely different story.

Double Dutch Fuss

A Memoir

Phill Branch

In this personal narrative, Branch reckons with the patriarchy and tradition of these social structures in Black America, their legacy, and how they molded and silenced him. Branch writes unflinchingly about growing up as the queer black son of a complicated and often absent father with rigid ideas of masculinity. From early inappropriate relationships with men twice his age, to his successful rebranding at Hampton University, to the dichotomy of Hollywood, Branch navigates his complex emotions surrounding success, perceptions of manhood, and ultimately his father.

Notes on a Blacklash

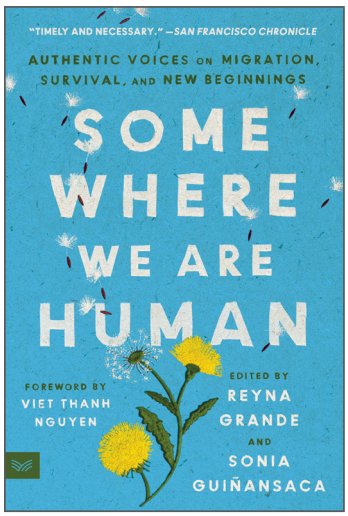

When a Black Woman Goes Viral

April Ryan

Notes on a Blacklash by veteran White House reporter April Ryan is a gripping, soul-baring look at what happens when the world suddenly turns its full attention on you. This isn't just the story of one viral moment with President Trump. It's about the avalanche that follows: the scrutiny, the emotional and physical toll, and the way your identity can become fuel for headlines and hashtags.

April pulls back the curtain on what it truly costs to be seen and what it takes to survive it. With vulnerability and power, she recounts the moments that made her go viral, not because she chased attention, but because she showed up authentically. Her presence, her truth, and her refusal to shrink under pressure struck a chord and sparked cultural firestorms.

Why We Ask Why

The Science of Explanation and the Human Drive to Understand

Tania Lombrozo

Humans are explanation-seeking creatures. We wonder why there's traffic, why a friend behaved a certain way, why the sky is blue, and—in moments of existential reflection—why we are here. Over the last twenty-five years, renowned cognitive scientist, and Princeton University psychology professor, Tania Lombrozo has turned this explanation-seeking tendency back on itself to ask: Why do humans explain? What does explanation do for us? And, most important, how can we do it better?

In Why We Ask Why, Lombrozo takes readers on a journey into the depths of explanation, exploring the role that this fundamental cognitive process plays for each of us as we engage with others and the world around us. Through scientific studies and lively stories, we come to appreciate that explanations aren't simply facts that describe the past but also mental acts that decide the future. Astute, thought-provoking, and constantly surprising, Why We Ask Why is a book that offers explanations for questions you didn't even know you had.

How Things Are Made

A Journey Through the Hidden World of Manufacturing

Tim Minshall

Unless you are floating naked through space, you are right now in direct contact with multiple manufactured products, including furniture, technology, clothing, and even food. And yet the processes by which these things appear in our lives are virtually invisible. How often do we stop to think: Where do the things we buy actually come from? How are they made, and how do they make their way into our hands?

The answers can be found in How Things Are Made, which traces the surprising paths taken by everyday items to reach consumers, from design to creation to delivery. Innovation expert Tim Minshall takes us on a journey through the manufacturing world, from the smallest job shops to mega-factories, from global shipping hubs to local delivery at your door, revealing the inner workings of the system that runs 24-7-365 to make and deliver the things we need—or want—to live our daily lives.

The Light Eaters

How the Unseen World of Plant Intelligence Offers a New Understanding of Life on Earth

Zoë Schlanger

What is intelligent life if not a vine that grows leaves to blend into the shrub on which it climbs, a flower that shapes its bloom to fit exactly the beak of its pollinator, a pea seedling that can hear water flowing and make its way toward it? In Light Eaters, Zoë Schlanger delivers a groundbreaking work of popular science that probes the hidden world of the plant kingdom and reveals the astonishing capabilities of the green life all around us.

Chain Reaction

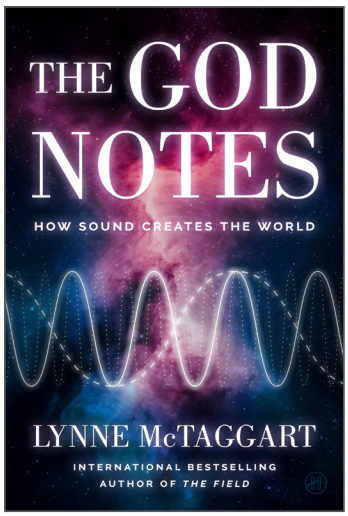

How Chemistry Shapes Us and Our World

Ijeoma Uchegbu

We all have a relationship with chemistry. Bonds between molecules, forged and broken in the blink of an eye, underpin everything from the food we eat and the clothes we wear to the ways we treat illnesses and construct our homes.

In Chain Reaction, Ijeoma Uchegbu, president of Wolfson College, Cambridge, and professor of pharmaceutical nanoscience at University College London, shows us the world through a chemist's eyes.

We travel from Uchegbu's home in London to Nigeria, where cooking experiments go awry in her family kitchen, and to Italy, where the chemically inert compounds that make up stained glass keep medieval windows shining. The careful interplay of bonds and molecules brings a sense of order and wonder to the chaos of our lives, she shows, and we don't have to wear a lab coat to appreciate it.

The God Notes

How Sound Creates the World

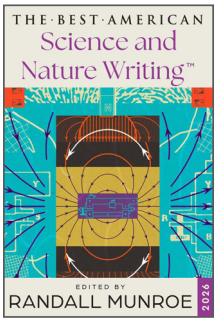

Lynne McTaggart

Did you know that plants can "hear" sounds that help them grow and ward off predators? Or that the sun, the planets, and black holes emit rhythmic sounds that have a profound impact on life on Earth?

The God Notes is first book to explain just how the sounds around us and the sounds we make affect our lives. Specific sounds create major effects on the human mind and body, and there are both "good" sounds (or "God notes") capable of instantly transporting human beings into an altered state, and "bad notes" (such as from seismic rumblings, container ships, solar flares or wind turbines), causing distress or illness.

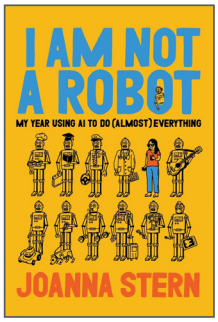

The God Notes is an awe-inspiring scientific story revealing the mysteries of sound—impacting everything within and around us, from our cells and brains to other living things, our relationships and even the cosmos.

Taipei Story

A Novel

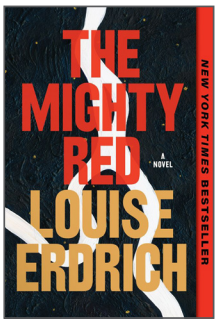

R. F. Kuang

From the author of Yellowface comes a wryly humorous and deeply poignant coming-of-age novel about a college student reckoning with her family history and cultural identity during a summer study abroad program in Taipei.

College freshman Lily Chen is in Taipei doing what so many Chinese American students do on their summers: learning Chinese at an intensive study abroad program. Her summer is already off to a bad start: she's embarrassed about her Chinese, she feels like a fish out of water, her classes are grueling, and she's fighting with her roommate. But then Lily's grandfather unexpectedly passes away, and as Lily grieves, she slowly comes to terms with everything she didn't know, and will never know, about her own family.

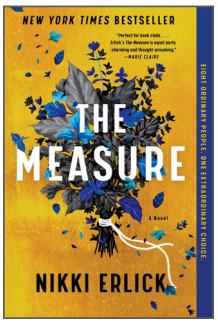

Taipei Story asks: What if the diaspora fantasy of homecoming can't come true? What if you never learn to feel at home in the country your parents left? What if you never manage to speak your mother tongue? What if you learn your mother tongue, but far too late?

How to Be Bold

The Surprising Science of Everyday Courage

Ranjay Gulati

What leads people to speak truth to power, share bold new ideas, or put their lives on the line? Most of us chalk it up to personality, presuming that our heroes are naturally fearless. But what if courage isn't simply a matter of personality? What if it's something that any of us can develop?

In How to Be Bold, Ranjay Gulati offers a powerful playbook for becoming bolder and braver than we ever thought possible. Rather than leaving brave deeds to mythological heroes and resigning ourselves to apathy or cowardice, we can train ourselves to step up and act in the face of uncertainty. The key, Gulati argues, is to adopt ways of thinking that allow us to neutralize or moderate our fears.

Sarah J. Jackson

A Second Sight is a long overdue appraisal that situates Black mediamakers at the vanguard of telling the American story.

Drawing from W.E.B. Du Bois's philosophical work, deep historical analysis, and dozens of interviews with today's most active Black mediamakers, A Second Sight shows them positioned at the margins of their industries and navigating fraught relationships to power. They've warned of the greatest dangers to democracy—from slavery to Nazism, and mass incarceration to misinformation. Their work is central to our culture and politics.

Brilliant, urgent and illuminating, this book is an authentic and candid grappling with a discordant thread in the American fabric and, in the telling, presents a way forward.

Black, White, Colored

The Hidden Story of an Insurrection, a Family, a Southern Town, and Identity in America

Lauretta Malloy Noble and LeeAnet Noble

In the late nineteenth century, Laurinburg, North Carolina, was a beacon of racial calm—a place where Blacks and Whites could live and work together. Black families like the Malloys became landlords, businessmen, and doctors. But that progress was shattered on the eve of Election Day, 1898, when supremacist groups launched a bloody attack, forcing Laurinburg's Black citizens to flee. This bloody race riot was the only recorded insurrection, stripping middle-class Blacks—who made strides during Reconstruction—of their seats on every electoral board.

Black, White, Colored is the first book to tell the story of the events in Laurinburg and its impact on the town's Black occupants. Descendants Lauretta Malloy Noble and LeeAnét Noble carefully piece together that fateful event and its aftermath, providing compelling details of how their family became one of this Southern town's richest and most powerful despite slavery, violent white supremacist groups, floods, war, and other roadblocks to success.

The Explorers

A New History of America in Ten Expeditions

Amanda Bellows

The archetype of the American explorer, a rugged white man, has dominated our popular culture since the late eighteenth century. But our commonly held ideas about American exploration do not tell the whole story.

The Explorers rediscovers a varied group of Americans who traversed the farthest reaches of the globe in their endeavor to find the unknown and escape from lives circumscribed by racism, sexism, poverty, and discrimination.

How Scholars and Librarians Became the Unlikely Spies of World War II

Elyse Graham

At the start of WWII, the United States found itself in desperate need of an intelligence agency. The Office of Strategic Services (OSS), a precursor to today's CIA, was quickly formed. To fill its ranks with experts, the agency turned to academia for recruits. Suddenly, literature professors, librarians, and historians were training to perform undercover operations and investigative work—and these unexpected spies would go on to profoundly shape both the course of the war and modern spy craft.

Author Elyse Graham draws on personal histories, diaries, and declassified files to tell the stories of unforgettable characters like Joseph Curtiss, a literature professor who hunted down German spies and turned them into double agents; Sherman Kent, a history professor who rose to become the head of analysis for all of Europe and Africa; and Adele Kibre, an archivist who was sent to Stockholm to secretly acquire documents.

Against Convenience

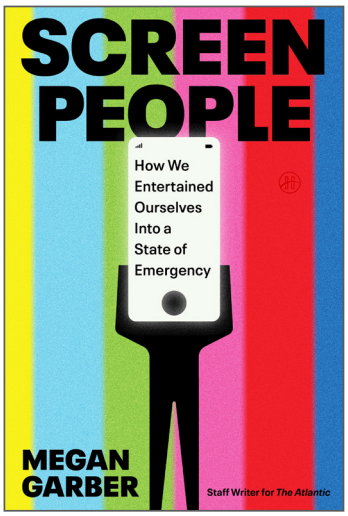

Embracing Friction in an Age of Endless Ease

Gabe Bullard

We live in a world addicted to convenience. Countless tools and innovations fill our daily lives, allowing us to swipe, tap, click, and subscribe without a second thought: ordering groceries to your door, calling an Uber for a ride up the block, or scrolling the endless songs and TV shows at our fingertips.

In theory, convenience can leave us with more energy and time to do what we want to do, save us resources, and complete tasks with less effort than before. But what if we aren't actually accomplishing any of those things?

Gabe Bullard offers a peek behind the curtain of the services and technologies that allegedly make our lives easier. Against Convenience is a provocative exploration of modern "convenience culture" and how we can resist and reclaim our time, resilience, and happiness.

Screen People

How We Entertained Ourselves into a State of Emergency

Megan Garber

The line between fact and fiction—between what's real and what's fabricated for entertainment—has never been more blurred. Screen People explores what happens when we cede our reality to spectacle, and how some of our most chronic and harmful social conditions—loneliness, depression, mistrust, misinformation, cynicism—stem from our demand for diversion.

Megan Garber explains how today's internet-inflected culture conditions us to see one another not as people but as characters in an ongoing show. In ten chapters, each themed around an element of stagecraft—from "The Producers" who edit our reality, to "The Props," the strangers we turn into objects of our amusement, to "the Haters," the worshipful Qanon-types who expect the prophecies of their anonymous leader to play out on live television—Garber argues that this comedy of our daily lives is quickly becoming tragedy. And we can't understand our politics without first understanding our culture.

The Language of Fanaticism

Amanda Montell

The Story of Stories

The Million Year History of a Uniquely Human Art

Kevin Ashton

The Story of Stories demonstrates that whether they are published to huge audiences or told in intimate conversations, stories affect our understanding of ourselves and our world in specific and measurable ways. It examines how different storytelling tools have altered and amplified these effects, redistributed the power of storytelling from the few to the many, and driven revolutions throughout human history.

Part celebration of the human art of storytelling, part scientific exploration of the act itself, The Story of Stories is a history, a survey, a narrative, and a powerful look into the future of our most human trait.

Essays on the Soul and Spine of America

Lauren Michele Jackson

The back bolsters cultural ideas about beauty, gender, art, labor, and race. In this dazzling essay collection, author Lauren Michele Jackson explores the mythos of the human back, drawing upon examples from literature, film, sport, visual art, and U.S. history.

Jackson's prose effortlessly shifts between conversational and intellectual. Inviting readers into digressions that illuminate rather than distract, she includes subjects such as bodybuilding, ballet, portrait photography, Gone With the Wind, horse racing, copyright law, and Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Back opens a broad door onto the body as both structure and metaphor, asking us what—and who—is made to bear weight.

Fast Food Nation: 25th Anniversary Edition

The Dark Side of the All-American Meal

Eric Schlosser

An updated edition of the bestselling exposé on how America's fast-food industry shaped the landscape of America and the world, with a new afterword from the author.

Fast Food Nation blew the lid off the fast-food industry—exposing how they've mauled our landscapes, widened the gap between rich and poor, fueled an epidemic of obesity, and propelled American cultural imperialism abroad. Now with a new afterword, Eric Schlosser rings the alarm again, calling attention to the damage wrought by corporate control of America's food system and stressing just how the forces he first identified are even more powerful today.

A History of the World's Most Hated (and Misunderstood) Word

Megan C. Reynolds

In this book, culture writer and editor for Dwell magazine Megan C. Reynolds takes us through the unique etymology and usage of this oft-reviled word, highlighting how it is often used to undermine people who are traditionally seen as having less status in society—women, younger people, people from specific subcultures—and how, if thought about differently, it might open up a new way of communication and validation. Written in a breezy yet informative and engaging style, this is a must-read for anyone who considers themselves a grammarian, a lover of language, and an advocate for the marginalized in discussions of cultural capital, power, and progress.
